Have you considered how technology relates to creation? Human creativity provides strong evidence for creation. Created in God’s image, we reflect some of the Creator’s attributes, including the desire to create things, especially technological tools. We are indeed sub-creators.

The information content in our created artifacts clearly shows the creative intelligence that was necessary in their design, building, and use. Here is more convincing evidence for creation as information can only come from intelligence, as stated in Proverbs 8.

Humans create in a trinitarian manner, mirroring the creative process employed by God. Any act of creation requires idea, implementation, and interaction. Here is yet another great evidence for the original creation.

While we often think of creation in terms of science, we also need to consider the engineering aspects of creation. Creation requires both science and engineering as it encompasses both analysis and synthesis.

As creation apologists, technology can be a wonderful conversation topic as we interact with the honest skeptic. Let’s discuss some practical and winsome ways we can share the evidence for creation!

Our Speaker: Dr. Gary Locklair

Gary Locklair serves as professor of computer science at Concordia University Wisconsin. Prior to CUW, he worked in the computing industry. His BS, MS, and PhD degrees are in computer science. He has been an active researcher in the field of Cosmogony (science of origins) for many years. He served on the board of directors of the Creation Research Society and he is also a Fellow of the Society. He teaches a university course on Cosmogony. He serves his home congregation, St. Matthew Port Washington, as an elder. He and his wife Karen have 5 grown children and 9 grandchildren. They enjoy living on a small hobby farm with their rescued animals.
